

Variety & Growth

Everyone has all six. Your top two are the ones that, when they're missing, make work feel flat.

YOUR SIX DRIVERS

WHAT YOUR TOP TWO MEAN

Variety

Sameness is what burns you out, not workload. You need new problems, different clients, changing formats.

Watch for: starting more than you finish.

Growth

You measure a job by whether you're better than you were. A plateau feels worse to you than pressure.

Watch for: chasing new skills over finishing current work.

Bring your top two and your answer to the third reflection question to your goal-setting conversation. We'll use it to shape your quarter and how your work gets recognised — because "well done" means different things to different people.

YOUR ANSWERS

Think of a time here you felt genuinely proud of your work. What actually happened?

A campaign I ran end to end that actually moved their numbers.

What's something you'd love to be trusted with that you aren't yet?

Running a pitch on my own.

If we could only give you one of these next quarter, which would you pick?

More freedom to make your own calls

1. A shoot is six weeks away. A supplier tells you they can't get you what you need in time.

a) Scale the shoot back to what's possible

2. Your client messages at 8pm Sunday. Something's broken on their end and they're stressed.

b) Reply now to acknowledge, fix it Monday morning

3. A client asks for something clearly outside their scope, casually, like it's nothing.

c) Say you'd love to and you'll send through the scope and cost

4. A colleague disagrees with your direction on a shared account, publicly in Slack.

d) Let it go — not worth the friction

5. Your account has been flat for six weeks. Nobody has said anything.

a) Keep going — the client isn't complaining

6. You've made a mistake on a client deliverable. It's gone out. They haven't noticed.

b) Tell the client straight away

7. You've been asked to do something you don't know how to do.

c) Say it's not your skillset

8. A client pushes back hard on price for extra work.

d) Take it to Divina

9. You get a brief that's vague. The deadline is tight.

a) Start on your best interpretation

10. You notice one of your client's competitors doing something clever that would work for your client. Nobody asked you to look.

b) Work it into a proposal and send it

11. You've finished everything on your list at 2pm.

c) Find something that would move one of your accounts

12. A brand-new client is being onboarded and you notice their agreement hasn't been signed yet. It's not your account.

d) Nothing — not your job

Framework: the six human needs (Tony Robbins) — a lens for reading what people want from work, not a validated psychometric. Scenario format adapted from Steven Bartlett's culture test.